BREED THEATER. The Forest Rangers," Great Western Feature.

Although there have been many fine western pictures exhibited at the Breed theater this season, it is doubtful if any one of them could excel the superb, thrilling story of The Forest Rangers. This is a true story of the conditions in certain portions of the extreme west, and deals with a class of cowboys who make their living by dealing in stolen timber. At the time of the plot the government has despatched a detective to capture a gang who have been working in an isolated district. He assumes a clever disguise and succeeds in getting into their hut, but they become suspicious of him and plan to kill him before morning, but the housekeeper, hearing their plot, and remembering the kindness the stranger had shown her earlier in the evening. hurries to the government office and notifies the marshal of the danger the detective is in, and then returns with the hecessary assistance to canture the thieves. This is a wonrns with the necessary assistance apture the thieves. This is a won-ul story, and shows some remark-views of the forests and the method of "hurry-felling."

The Biograph story entitled A Child's Faith, is a natural plot, dealing with everyday affairs, that cannot fall to with splendid success the great hit.

Her chief duties were the care of the household, the training of her children, and ministering to the needs of her husband's parents with whom she lived. The Japanese theory is that every old name must be kept up, and it is considered an insult to one ancestors to die without leaving descendants. A man who has no sons usually adopts one, who assumes the family name, and who in turn becomes the head of the house. If there is a daughter in such a family it is the custom of the adopted son to marry her. When a man marries, his wife usually becomes a member of his house, but in some cases a husband becomes a member of his wife's house. No marriage is considered legal in Japan until either the husband or wife stom of the adopted son to marry reputation for the high grade of its car men and justly so. They are a lot of men and justly so. They are a lot of men and justly so. They are a lot of men however, who meet a quantity of human nature in their work, and generally get the best of it.—Portland examines a member of his wife's house, or marriage is considered legal in the house book of the second in the house hook of the second in the house house house house. Japan until either the husband or wife is registered in the bouse book of the other. While the head of the house is theoretically the oldest male member thereof, it frequently happens that a father resigns this office to one of his sons and he is then obliged to render to that son obedience in matter pertaining to the welfare of the house. There are instances in which a woman has been the acknowledged head of a house and in such cases the male mas been the acknowledged head of a house and in such cases the male members of the family have been obliged to render obedience to her. The consent of the head of a house is necessary for the marriage of one of its members, his authority superseding even that of the parents. The new highly dead house at her wastle even that of the parents. The new civil code, however, has greatly curtailed the power of the house head. Both men and women are now entitled to hold individual property, and the rights of women in this particular are practically the same as those of men.—London Times.

It is known that while Admiral Cowles, who is today on the retired list of the United States navy, after receiving all of the honors that can be bestowed on a man in his profession, would not seek a nomination for representative in the Connecticut legislature, pet as a loyal son of Farmington and of Connecticut he would not refuse it if it was teadered him by a practically unanimous vote. Admiral Cowles is a Farmington boy and has been at all times intensely loyal to his native town. He has come back to the town to spend the remainder of his days at Oldgate. During the early days of his career when the pay of the position that he held at that time was not large, it required considerable sacrifice on his part to retain the old home, but nothing would induce him to part with it. The town can do itself good and at the same time do good to Connecticut by sending a man of the callber of Admiral Cowles to the legislature.

A False Report. A False Report.

The current report that the fumes from automobiles run by gasoline drive mosquitoes from the vicinity of the public roads is an unmitigated fake. And so is the story that oil sprinkled on the roads has the same effect. Had they been true, hardly a mosquito would be faund in Bergen, Essex, Hurson. Passaic or Union counties, where antemobile fumes and oiled roads are alam antly the evicence. The only effective lise to be made of oil, in the mosquito crusade, is to sprinkle it over fective use to be made of oil, in the mosquito crusade, is to sprinkle it over starmant pools, and thus smother the "wrigglers." After the pest is hatched and has taken wing, only a comparatively few can be desiroyed or driven away. The war is one of extermination by prevention, rather than by hand slanging citronella, pyrethrum powder, gasoline funes, etc. The main thing is to break up the hatcheries. Much has already been done in this direction, but the presence of a multitude of "pipiens" this year proves that much more remains to be done.—Newark News.
